Need Vocational Nurses, States Harbor Director

"There is no unemployment among graduates of the vocational nursing program of Los Angeles Harbor College," states Roberta Lindberg, director of vocational nursing at the Wilmington institution. "There are many more job opportunities in the local hospitals and health agencies than there are nurses available."

Requirements for becoming a vocational nurse are, being between 18 and 50 years of age with a tenth grade education or equivalent, and a sincere desire to serve those suffering from illness, or physical or mental disabilities. Other qualifications are that prospective students must make application for admission to the college, and take the entrance examination, followed by a personal interview with a member of the college nursing staff.

The vocational nursing course, which lasts for three semesters, qualifies a graduate to take the state examination to become a licensed vocational nurse.

Anyone wishing to enter the September class should make application as soon as possible, or phone the college admissions office at TE 4-8581 for further information.

Vale Award Given at June 1 Banquet

Outstanding student work in the division of humanities was recognized in the form of a monetary award presented in honor of Eugene Vale, novelist, playwright and screen writer, Marie Mittwar, English instructor at El Camino College, announced last week.

Vale, author of "The Thirteenth Apostle" and recent guest lecturer at El Camino, requested that the customary honorarium given speakers be directed, instead, to a deserving student within the division.

Recipient was named at the student Awards Banquet June 1.
